ALEAA. GAZETTE & VIRGINIA ADVERTISER. (FOR THE COUNTRY,) Published regularly on TUESDAYS, THURS-DAYS and SATURDAYS, at FIVE DOLLARS

A MARVELOUS NARRATIVE.

PER ANNUM, payable in advance.

The St. Louis Republican publishes an account of a trial involving a most marvellous question of identity now progressing in court at Malone, Franklin county, N. Y. The story goes that Willis Payton, a farmer, forty years of age, went south two years ago to peddle a patent spring bed, leaving a wife and several children, some of whom were well grown. At Terre Haute he spent some time, and after leaving that place he lost all consciousness, but after a nime realized that he was in a hospital at Evansville, Ind., recovering from small-pox. He was then hald, and when he resumed his clothing every article appeared to have been made for a much smaller man. The pantaloons, which he recognized as his. were at least six inches too short. He could not get any trace of pital he went to a friend, who spurned him as an impostor. He looked in a mirror and doubted his own identity. He first thought of suicide, and his text thought was of here. cide, and his text thought was of home. The latter prevailed. On the way he was taken ill again, and once more all the world was a blank. He finally arrived at his own door after an absence of two years. Willis Peyton's family be-lieved him dead. The Willis Peyton who had left that threshold two years before had light hair, nearly red, and a very scanty beard, and was thin in flesh. The Willis Peyton who now knocked at the door was much taller, answered, "No, sir, I do not; who are you?"
The man burst into tears and said: "You'll not believe me, I know, when I tell you; but it's got to come some time, and might as well now as not. I'm Willis Peyton." Mrs. Pey-ton shrank from him, ordered him out of doors and two of her sons and a hired man took him to the nearest justice, who sent him to jail as a lunatic. He was first tried by a commission of lunacy, and was adjudged perfectly sane. He is now being tried before the surrogate on the question of his pretensions as the husband of Mrs. Peyton and the owner of the Peyton property. He has shown marks on his person, related instances of his private family history recalled circumstances in connection with old associates, all tending to prove the truth of his claim. And the "Widow Peyton" sits in the court room, by turns looking at the claimant to her bed and board, and crying as witness after witness avows his belief that the strange man is Willis Peyton. She has told her friends that if he really is Peyton he may have the farm, stock, and everything, but herself. Sometimes during passages of the trial he implores her to look again and see if she cannot recognize one teature and acknowledge him as her husband, but she refuses, and his earnest, appealing face suddenly becomes clouded by despair. He says if the suit terminates in his favor he will only ask a living off the farm, and will never intrude upon his wife and children, unless they voluntarily recognize him.

TWO NOTABLE WILLS. Two notable wills, remarks the London Daily Telegraph, have just been proved, and abstracts of their provisions have been published in the columns of an illustrated contemporary, which takes pleasure in making known the innermost desires of dead men. Rank and talent cannot be permitted to enjoy privacy, even as regards the contents of their last wills and testaments, and the public will not deem that any considerations of decorum have been violated in the announcement that the personal estate, inclusive of leaseholds, of the late Sir Edwin Landseer, has been sworn under one hundred and sixty thousand pounds, and that of the late Sir Henry Holland under one hundred and forty thousand pounds With regard to the relations, friends and dependents to whom the illustrious painter and the eminent physician have left their wealth, it is not necessary in this place to be more communicative. Looking upon them. as their contemporaries have a right to do, as thoroughly public men, it must be a matter of satisfaction to know that Sir Edwin and Sir Henry died so rich. More gratifying it is to remember that their affluence was the result of their own strenuous and indefatigable exertions. We will not say that in Sir Henry Holland's case he must have paid one hundred and forty thousand visits to patients, or half that number at a guinea, or two guineas, par seance, in order to pile up the peculium although, supposing him to have seen only a dozen patients per diem during his fifty years of active practice, he may have been consulted two hundred and nineteen thousand times. It is well known, however, that the wondering Hakik began his life with very modest resources, and that the bulk of his fortune was carefully and patiently built up by the pursuit of his vocation. Physiciaus' fees, when they do begin to flow in, tumble in on the recipient with cataract like volume; and we all remember the story of the famous doctor of Queen Anne's reign, who when he had lost all his savings in a financial crash, remarked that the misfortune was only equivalent to going up so many thousand flights of stairs again. With respect to Sir Edwin, it was not until late in life that he could command really large prices, and began to make money. Twenty years ago, he was comparatively a poor man, or, rather, he was in the comfortable position of not knowing whether he was rich or poor. Virtually the print sellers, and not the pictures he painted, made the great artist's fortune, which was carefully "nursed" by devoted fliends. The result was a puble one. It would have been a national scaudal had our Landseer died in indigence.
